

Your Tutor

Teaching someone to teach driving is totally different from teaching someone to actually drive.

This is why your ADI trainer will be ORDIT (the Official Register for Driving Instructor Training) Registered having to submit to regular DSA inspections and assessments; will be fully up to date with the requirement of the exam, and trains instructors on a regular basis.

As everyone has a different rate of learning, our trainers will structure your training programme to suit your particular needs. The average training period is around six months, but the actual timing is totally individual to each candidate.

ORDIT was set up by the Driving Standards Agency to protect the public from substandard instructor training by setting a minimum standard of competencies for training providers. The DSA only recommend ORDIT organisations to provide instructor training.
